Society for the Humanities presents

Thomas Balcerski

Department of History, Cornell University

Civil War at the Tredwells and Other Lessons Learned from the Public Humanities Front

What are the prospects for the public humanities today?

How does funding work for public projects?

What are the possibilities of intersection between the academy and the public?

Join Thomas Balcerski, the inaugural Cornell University Graduate Student Public Humanities Fellow, for this lively lunch-time colloquium about the practice of the public humanities today. Balcerski will discuss his experiences as a public humanities fellow, with particular emphasis on his collaboration with the Merchant’s House Museum located on E. 4th Street in Manhattan.

Light lunch will be provided.

Friday, April 25, 12:30 p.m.

Second-floor library,
